Performance, Style and Gesture in Western Theatre Bloomsbury Publishing

"Our Home, Our Passion is a tale of two post-World War II newlyweds who build a unique home for themselves in a pristine area of the Berkeley Hills of Northern California. Along with their iconoclastic architect [Robert Weaver Stevens], they pioneered a home of great beauty and style on a shoestring budget. After a tragic firestorm swept through those hills forty-five years later, they built their home again. Their story is filled with determination, creativity, serendipity, and love." --

Until the beginning of the 20th Century, when naturalism began to assert its powerful influence on western theatre, acting was a very different business indeed. Rather than attempting to reproduce realistic behaviour, actors conveyed their characters' feelings and intentions by using a vocabulary of minutely prescribed and highly stylised movements and gestures, each with its own meaning and significance. In this wide-ranging, illustrated survey, Nicholas Dromgoole traces the origins and evolution of this lost 'language of gesture' from ancient Greece to the contemporary stage, and asks what it would actually have been like to watch the great plays - and the great actors - of western theatre in their own day.

This book, first published in 1929, analyses the changes to Birmingham and the Black Country in the nineteenth century. The area underwent quite a transformation: many of the older trades were decaying, while at the same time a number of new manufactures were making a remarkable rapid advance. As a result of this, the industrial structure of the area in the early twentieth century was made up of very different constituents from those of which it was composed sixty years previously. This is an invaluable study of a remarkable industrial transformation that was carried out in a very short space of time.
